Supply and Delivery of Insecticides to be used for the Dengue Prevention and Control Program for 2024 in the City of San Fernando, Pampanga

I. BACKGROUND

Dengue is the most rapidly increasing arboviral disease in the city. Aedes aegypti is the most effective vector of dengue, because it is highly susceptible to the dengue virus and feeds almost exclusively on humans in the daytime there is also another mosquito vector that causes another vector-borne disease that we also have to address, Generally, dengue vector control approaches include breeding site reduction, environmental management, larvicide, and adulticide. Vector control often includes the spraying of insecticides in and around houses of positive cases. This particular chemical approach is referred to as perifocal space spraying or perodomestic space spraying.

Space spraying involves the application of small droplets of insecticides into the air in an attempt to kill adult mosquitoes and is mainly in emergency situations when an outbreak of dengue fever is already in progress or where routine source reduction activities have failed to limit the production of adult A. Aegypti and the risk of dengue transmission are high. Space spraying is attractive because it is highly visible and conveys the message that health authorities are combating dengue through vector control activities and this could be an important tool, particularly during epidemics, as it targets the adult mosquito In practice, space sprays can only reduce dengue transmission if the adult vector population is reduced in density to below a threshold, or if the mosquitoes are killed before they reached an age beyond the extrinsic incubation period of the virus.
